ORLANDO, Fla. (April 22, 2026) – Quest, Inc. has opened Quest Kids Orlando (QKO), an innovative and state-of-the-art campus serving children, teens and young adults with autism and other developmental disabilities.

On April 21, Quest hosted a ribbon-cutting ceremony for the 16,000-square-foot facility – located at 500 E. Colonial Dr. near the heart of Downtown Orlando. QKO houses Quest Kids Academy and Quest Kids Therapy in a single location, making it easier for families to access important resources.

Quest Kids Academy – which has been operating in an interim location – serves those ages 5-22 in in two major focus areas: foundational core academics and life skills and employment readiness. Quest Kids Therapy helps children with life-skills acquisition and social development, while using positive reinforcement strategies to improve outcomes. All programming at QKO uses the principles of Applied Behavior Analysis, the gold standard for clinically proven methods for behavioral intervention.

“This is more than a new building; it’s a commitment to our community that we’re here to help families as the instances of autism continues to increase,” said John R. Gill, President and CEO at Quest. “At Quest Kids Orlando, our building finally matches the world-class service we’ve been offering Central Florida for over twenty years.”

The opening of Quest Kids Orlando symbolizes continued collaboration with local partners including Dr. Phillips Charities, which provided the lead philanthropic gift for the project and was the first community donor to Quest in 1966.

“We are proud to support the opening of Quest, Inc.’s newly reimagined facility, a space that will empower children and young adults with developmental disabilities to learn, grow, and thrive,” said Dr. Phillips Charities President and CEO Kenneth D. Robinson. “This transformation reflects our shared commitment to creating opportunities and strengthening the community. In this supportive, state-of-the-art environment, we hope every individual here can reach their fullest potential.”
